Objective of the webinar

Civil society can establish a democracy in a country that is based on its function. Democracy is put into practice through the ideas, objectives, the distribution of power between strategy, organization and leaders on the civil society in the context of politics, in the country and internationally. Democracy will run well if there are groups of people who organize the Government, civil society always monitor how public officials in power, using its strength in making policy, challenging the freedom of access to information laws or regulations .

Civil society may encourage the life of development in everyday life, such as tolerance, moderation, compromise, and respect for differences of opinion. Without such attitudes, then democracy will not be stable. Democracies make their role more effectively with the support of civil society of country. Civil society can promote democratic political participation with the fight for their rights as citizens, aspires at the voice, solving together and come to blows for public related issues. Civil society can provide the education of democracy, with the nurturing of the values, concepts, along with training that relates to democracy.

Civil society acts as a dome to express, lobbying, which can then be strengthened democracy because of the formation of new interests and form solidarity so that democracy can be stable. Civil society can provide information and monitor the elections as well as the resolution of a divergence. Some of these functions can make democracies more effective and legitimate, because of the positive relationship between civil society and democracy. Participants were given a detail understanding on the civil society and democracy.
